

Editorials

By George, he did it

George Martin walked the walk. Concerned about sick World Trade Center rescue and recovery workers, the former Giants great decided to take steps to raise money for their help.

And boy, did he take steps. Millions of them, in a 3,000-mile trek from New York to San Diego.

Martin walked an average of 22 miles a day for nine months. Along the way he met with locals - and members of Congress - to educate them about responders who need medical help that they too often can't get.

The trek drummed up $2 million - money that will be put to good use, money that wouldn't be needed if the Bush administration had met its obligation to care for those who answered the call after 9/11.

Thankfully, a one-time Super Bowl champ knows the score.